In the midst of another school shooting, this Atlanta crisis did not have the tragic ending it could have. One faith-based woman found the inner strength and confidence to confront her captor and gunman "in the moment," saving hundreds of lives.

Recently, her story was made into a Lifetime movie "Faith Under Fire" starring Toni Braxton and produced by TD Jakes and Sony which was based on her book PREPARED for a PURPOSE. Additionally, you can listen to her story in her own words and from faculty, law enforcement, psychologists and hostage negotiators who commented on her heroism in The Antoinette Tuff Story, also produced by Lifetime.

Your audience will be on the edge of their seats as Antoinette recounts 2-hours of sheer terror and how she handled the situation. With 870 children, faculty and staff under siege, one woman, a school bookkeeper, met her moment, forcing her to rewrite her own life history, while rewriting the possible tragic ending so common in school shootings, as well as other random shootings, taking place in America today.

Antoinette said to her captor, "It's going to be all right. Push through the pain. I know what you are feeling. I've been there too." It was her mindfulness in the moment that shifted an unstable, violent gunman to see, in the midst of his own mental crisis, the possibilities of life and courage, and the compassion, and faith of one woman who believed in him to do the right thing, surrender.
